ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Va'aomanū Pasifika acknowledges with much appreciation the support provided to this research and publication by the VUW Office of Research and Postgraduate Studies and the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences (FHSS). Kam bati n raba.

In addition, the task of compiling this 'first-ever' inventory was lightened considerably by the invaluable assistance provided by many VUW staff including: Sue Hirst (Reference and Liaison, VUW Library), Philip Roderick (Office of Research and Postgraduate Studies) Christine Baker (School of Early Childhood Teacher Education, College of Education), Liz Wood (Executive Assistant, Officer of Pro Vice-Chancellor and Dean of Education PVC's Office); Susan Kaiser (Publishing Centre Editor for PVC Education); Anna Adams (School of Linguistics and Applied Language Studies), Lib Coubrough (Faculty of Law), Gillian Ruthven (School of Earth Sciences) Dawn Yeabsley (School of Government). Tangio tumas also to Dr. Kabini Sanga (Faculty of Education) for valuable advice on completing the inventory.

FOREWORD

Va'aomanū Pasifika has great pleasure in presenting our first publication – the Inventory of Pacific research at Victoria University of Wellington 1990–2005. The inventory captures an exciting range of Pacific research carried out at Victoria University of Wellington (VUW) during this five year period and sets a firm direction for the Va'aomanū Pasifika programme as well as for the development of Pacific research and teaching within the wider VUW community.

A few words first about the Va'aomanū Pasifika. Samoan Studies was introduced at VUW in 1989 and the Pacific Studies programme in 2000 – both under the Te Kawa o Maui Department. In 2005, VUW made the bold decision to combine these two programmes to form a Pacific 'flagship' the Va'aomanū Pasifika, an independent unit within the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences (FHSS). Today, the two Va'aomanū Pasifika programmes offer study through to post graduate level and this year we have two students enrolled in the Pacific Studies PhD. It has been both amazing and humbling to be part of this growing demand for Pacific scholarship – especially, but not only, by Pacific students.

This inventory of Pacific research strengths, gaps and opportunities is extremely timely. In line with its strategic goals of educating knowledgeable, skilled and creative leaders VUW already gives priority to recruiting and supporting Pacific students. Not only that, Pacific communities participate in university decision-making as members of the Vice Chancellors' Pacific Policy Advisory Committee (PPAC).

So what challenges does this first research inventory present for VUW and Va'aomanū Pasifika? As shown, Pacific research partnerships are developing between VUW faculties. Our Va'aomanū task is to be vigilant in reinforcing and emphasising the place of Pacific research, knowledge and epistemologies in VUW scholarship and within the wider New Zealand and international research community. That is a first challenge. Second, research has not been a priority for Pacific peoples. Our hope is that the information presented in this inventory will increase Pacific understanding of the role of research: that choices and decisions (national, community and family) should ideally be informed by solid people-focused research. Third, to emphasise that while Pacific scholars carry out mainstream research, we must at the same time develop our own research agendas.

The Va'aomanū Pasifika is on its way

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

When the Programme in Pacific Studies was established at Victoria University of Wellington (VUW) in 2000, it was because the university had both a ready constituency of students and a long and strong tradition of Pacific research. This inventory encompasses the initial six year period (1999–2005) in which Pacific Studies became formalised at VUW. Although there may be gaps, the inventory confirms some long-standing assumptions about Pacific research at VUW, while also offering a few revelations.

As will be seen, the majority of Pacific research during this period was carried out within the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences. Some key areas of productivity by academic staff between 1999 and 2005 were: Anthropology; Art History; Education; English, Film and Theatre Studies; History; Languages and Linguistics; Music; and Political Science and International Relations. Significant research on the Pacific also took place in the Faculty of Science, mainly in Biology, Earth Sciences, and Development Studies. Outputs from the Faculty of Commerce were traced to Accounting and Commercial Law, Economics and Finance, Information Management, and Tourism Studies. The Faculty of Law also generated quality research outputs on Pacific legal issues while the School of Architecture and Design; the Roy Mackenzie Centre for the Study of Families; and the Post Graduate School of Nursing and Midwifery confirmed their interest in developing Pacific research potential.

There was a noticeable increase from 2002 in the research outputs of ethnic Pacific academic staff and postgraduate researchers, much of which can be directly attributed to the “Rethinking Education in the Pacific” project coordinated by Dr. Kabini Sanga (Faculty of Education) and funded by NZAID. This increase shows very clearly how research by, and for, Pacific people can be fostered by a longer term funded project.

Some gaps became visible in the survey of postgraduate theses: The History Department, for example, had not produced any research degrees on Pacific topics in this five-year period in spite of a record of almost half a century of distinguished Pacific research in that discipline; and English, Film and Theatre have not produced any research degrees on Pacific topics, even though there is a dynamic environment of Pacific literary and cultural production around Wellington.

This inventory demonstrates that a broad and healthy base for Pacific research cannot be confined to a single unit such as Pacific Studies, and is necessarily owned across the university. With the establishment in 2005 of Va’aomanū Pasifika, the unit charged with giving sharper focus to VUW’s Pacific research and teaching, the challenges for VUW are twofold: 1) to establish a regular stock-take of Pacific research outputs, and 2) to enhance and develop Pacific research at VUW by providing institutional support for cooperation and collaboration amongst academic staff and postgraduate researchers across the university. Strengthening Pacific research can only bring more benefits to VUW.

INTRODUCTION AND DEFINITIONS

This inventory seeks to document the range of research interests and activities taking place on Pacific topics at Victoria University of Wellington (VUW). It has emerged out of a collaboration between the Office of Research and Postgraduate Studies, and the Programme in Pacific Studies. The inventory aims to provide an informed basis for the strategic development of Pacific research and teaching at VUW, through the newly established unit, Va'aomanū Pasifika.

By "Pacific" we mean the most inhabited portions of the Pacific basin.

At times, reference may be made to "Pacific people": by this we mean people who trace descent to and/or are citizens of any of the territories commonly understood to be part of the Pacific (i.e., Melanesia, Micronesia, Polynesia). Alternative terms that may appear in the inventory include: "Pasifika", "Pasefika", "Pasifiki". These are respectively generic Polynesian, and specifically Samoan and Tongan variations on the word "Pacific".

The terms "Asia-Pacific" or "Asia Pacific" arise occasionally: we understand that the terms do not always coincide with our emphasis on the Pacific basin and Pacific peoples, and for the most part privilege nations and peoples on the "Pacific Rim". However, we are also aware that some permutations of "Asia-Pacific" at VUW are more conscientiously engaged with the Pacific basin. We have allowed for the benefit of the doubt in most cases.

In this inventory, distinction is made between academic staff who are "Pacific by ethnicity" and academic staff who are "Pacific by interest". Academic staff who are actively engaged in research on Pacific topics may not trace their ancestry to Pacific nations, while academic staff who are "Pacific by ethnicity" may not necessarily be conducting research on Pacific topics.

This inventory does not include exclusively Māori research. Inventories of Māori research activity and services at VUW have already been undertaken through the office of Toiahurei, the Pro Vice Chancellor Māori at VUW.

Finally, this research inventory is limited to the period 1999–2005 because of the restrictions of our staffing and research resources. While it would have been useful to have a more extensive inventory, perhaps reaching back 10 or even 30 years, this was beyond our means at the time and could be a future project. We know that we may not have captured all the Pacific research carried out during this period. We apologise for any omissions and welcome such information to add to and assist grow this inventory data base.

PACIFIC RESEARCH AND TEACHING AT VUW

Pacific-related research is carried out at Victoria University in a number of ways and places. It is carried out primarily by staff appointed to academic and research positions and reflects their personal research interests and expertise. The University also undertakes the teaching of Pacific-related content in courses, and section A below lists the schools that offered academic courses and programmes, in the 2005 academic year, that contain content matter relating directly to the Pacific region or peoples.

Research centres and institutes within the university also contribute to research on Pacific matters. Section B lists the research institutes and centres within the university, that indicated in 2005 an interest in the research of Pacific matters.

Section C provides a comprehensive list of the research and other academic publications produced by VUW and VUW College of Education academic staff members and researchers from 1999–2004.

While staff members account for the majority of Pacific research endeavours at VUW, postgraduate students at Victoria University also play a significant role in the generation of Pacific research. Section D lists the research theses, dissertations and reports that contain Pacific-related content produced by Masters and PhD candidates between the years 1999–2005.

B Research Institutes and Centres researching Pacific-related issues in 2005

Victoria University's research institutes and centres are highly productive and cover a wide range of fields. Several such institutes and centres frequently undertake the research of matters relating directly to the Pacific region or peoples. To follow is a list of research institutes and centres that declare an explicit interest in, and commitment to, Pacific issues. Because we have relied on self-definition as the criteria for listing here, we have not included other institutes and centres, such as the Centre for Applied Cross-Cultural Research, the Institute of Policy Studies, Roy McKenzie Centre for the Study of Families, and the Stout Research Centre, which we know actively promote research on either the Pacific or Pacific peoples as part of their broader agenda.

Centre for Accounting, Governance and Taxation Research

Rutherford House; Tel. 463 6957; Fax 463 5076

Email: accounting-research@vuw.ac.nz; Website: www.accounting-research.org.nz

The Centre was established within the School of Accounting and Commercial Law in recognition of the need for research that addresses accounting, governance and taxation issues having potential impact on the Asia-Pacific region. Its purpose is to advance and apply knowledge germane to the accounting and legal professions, commerce and industry and the public sector through both fundamental and applied research in the areas of accounting, governance and taxation.

Crime and Justice Research Centre

Level 11, Murphy Building; Tel. 463 5372; Fax 463 5277; Email: cjrc@vuw.ac.nz

The Crime and Justice Research Centre is a multidisciplinary unit which undertakes research and provides consultancy services to improve understanding and practice in the areas of crime and justice. It has a team of experienced staff with qualifications in criminology, psychology and law, quantitative and qualitative research skills, and acknowledged academic expertise and experience in providing services to policy makers. Research is carried out in collaboration with Māori and Pacific peoples and with other researchers from a range of backgrounds throughout the country.

New Zealand Electronic Text Centre

Email: director@nzetc.org; Website: www.nzetc.org

The New Zealand Electronic Text Centre (NZETC) hosts an ever-expanding free Internet archive of standards-based and searchable XML texts and images, delivered through an Open Source framework. With a predominantly New Zealand and Pacific Island focus, the archive offers a range of materials in multiple formats for download or online browsing. In addition to academic projects within the University, the NZETC provides expertise to a range of educational institutions, government departments and commercial organisations.

Institute of Geography

Level 3, Cotton Building; Tel. 463 5346; Fax 463 5186

The Institute promotes the development of geography through the strengthening of teaching and research linkages between geographers, colleagues in other disciplines, and practising geographers in the wider community. Particular strengths include the study of earth surface processes, socio-economic and cultural systems of New Zealand and the Asia Pacific region, environment and resource studies, development studies and the maintenance of active field research programmes.

Centre for Strategic Studies: New Zealand

Level 5, Rutherford House; Tel. 463 5434; Fax 463 5437; Website: www.vuw.ac.nz/css

The Centre, part of the School of Government, is an independent focal point for research and discussion of New Zealand's strategic security environment, focusing on the Asia-Pacific region and is also the co-ordinating agency for activities associated with the Council for Strategic Cooperation in the Asia-Pacific (CSCAP). It addresses matters of national security and defence, conflict resolution, and arms control and disarmament. It examines the strategic implications of political, economic, social and industrial issues, and seeks to provide a constructive input into policy development.

C Articles, Chapters, Collections, Conference Presentations, Edited Collections, Published Conference Papers, Reports and Other Academic Publications on Pacific-Related Issues, by VUW Staff from 1999–2004

The research output and academic publications of Academic Staff at Victoria University are documented each year, and consequently it is possible to extract from such reports a compilation of academic publications, which are directly relevant to the Pacific region or peoples. To follow is a list of research articles, books or book chapters, art collections, conference presentations and papers, reports and other academic publications produced by VUW and VUW College of Education staff between the years of 1999 and 2004. The publications are presented by year and are in alphabetical order according to the surname of the author.
